TWO ROOMS CLOSED

Sealed Fryer Case Causes Early Evacuation of School.

The discovery that Mary Clarke, 16-year-old daughter of E. W. Clarke of 1011 South Arch street, had been stricken with scarlet fever, caused two rooms in the South Side school building to be closed yesterday morning and fumigated. Medical inspection of the Connellsville public schools will begin this term about October 1. A committee of physicians will again examine the pupils free of charge in the room equipped for the purpose in the high school building last year.

A schedule of the days on which the various physicians will work and the times at which different sections will present themselves for examination, will be made up in the next few weeks.

THE E. DUNN STORE

Autumn :- Opening

An Authoritative Exhibit of Fall Millinery, Cloaks, Suits, Silks, Dress Goods and Accessories.

New Autumn Suits

The woman who wishes a suit for daily wear has special need to look to her store for assurance that every detail is sound and reliable. Not only perfect lines, but perfect linings, and inter-linings here in every suit. We promise you soft, lustrous satins of guaranteed excellence for coat linings, even in the suits at $12.50. Splendid values in suits that you should certainly see before buying at $15.00, $19.50, $25.00 to $50.00.

Distinctive Millinery at Moderate Prices.

If we lifted a page we could not tell you more. The hat for you is not the hat for someone else, and vice versa. That's why there are so many hats here. No two alike, each one a picture when trimming the right face. $1.05 to $50.00 are the prices. Never is there a lack of newness. Never a paucity of display; never will you fail of finding hats that you and every one else must concede to be beautiful and modish. Also the woman who must have a plain hat is admirably cared for.

New Style Coats

The styles this season are highly diversified. The staple styles are as usual very prominent with a variety of new materials. Some have capes, while others are plain with belted backs and military collars. The Russian Cossack is shown and is very smart in a handsome line of materials and colorings. Plain broadcloth coats with flare skirts, elegantly lined with guaranteed satin, will be extensively worn. Coats in fine styles are here in a range of prices from $5.95 to $50.00.

One of the Most Attractive Places in the Store.

is where all the pretty, dainty things for babies are shown. The little nites of humanity are usually incentive to great extravagance. Personal pride, vanity and love combine to make ordinarily frugal mothers almost indifferent as to cost when buying for the new baby. However, we do not take advantage of that phase of temperamental weakness by exacting large profits for infants' goods. We show an assortment of almost everything made that is needed for the comfort and adornment of the baby. We especially invite you to visit this department.

Fine Showing of Silks, Woolens, Linens and Bedding.

Let us show you our assortments. The stocks are well high perfect. It is not a melange, a miscellany of job lots picked up at random because the prices are low. However, in spite of the qualities, the prices, by comparison with other stores, are decidedly low. Women's verdict is potential concerning values, there is no appeal from it. We submit our offerings to them with the clear confidence inspired by the knowledge that they are right in every respect. Our Fall stocks were bought before the general advance in prices, but we have not taken this into consideration in marking goods.

Parents in making their Fall purchases should keep in mind that 5 per cent. of same will be credited to their baby's account. Don't fail to notify us of the arrival of the Stork, that the "little one" may be entered in our books, and a bank account started for same.

PLAYS THE DEMOCRATS

Senator Runk Attacks Extravagance of Present Administration.

By Associated Press.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 18.—Senator William F. Runk of Idaho, in opening the Indiana campaign of the Republican party, declared here last night that the Democratic administration practices "undue extravagance."

"The Democratic party was pledged in its platform in the most specific terms to economy," said Senator Runk, "yet Congress has already up to this date appropriated $1,117,000,000. That does not include the river and harbor bill, carrying appropriations in cash and obligations amounting to $93,000,000. Neither does it include any of the appropriations made necessary, as it is claimed, by the war."

"The appropriations to date are in excess of the Republican appropriations of the last Congress when the total appropriation was $3,100,000,000, and the appropriations of the present Congress when completed, in my judgment, amount to $200,000,000, or $260,000,000 in excess of that which was denounced as extravagance."

Colic and Diarrhea Cured.

No one who has used the preparation will doubt the statement of Mrs. Joseph Brown, Logansport, Ind., who writes, "Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhea Remedy has been used by members of my family and myself for the past twenty years. WANT PALMER OFF

Democrats and Bull Mooseers Demanding at the Barfoot Boy.

LEWISBURG, September 18.—A formal demand for the withdrawal of A. Mitchell Palmer as a candidate for United States senator was made here yesterday by a conference of the anti-labor forces, which endorsed Gifford Pinchot for the senatorship.

Nancy C. McCormick, Democratic nominee for governor; William T. Cressy, Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor; William N. McNair, Democratic candidate for secretary of internal affairs; and Lox N. Mitchell, A. R. Rupley, Anderson N. Walters and Harry Watson, Washington party candidates for congressional at large.

The gathering was dominated by the leaders and officers of the Washington and Democratic organizations and revealed plans for a consistent campaign to have Palmer eliminated.

As the campaign plans of the anti-labor forces unfolded themselves the words of William Flinn in the Washington party convention appeared almost prophetic. He had intimated that Palmer "might" drop out of the fight.

RHEUMATISM

Physician Believes a Genuine Remedy for the Disease Has Been Found.

Rheuma the wonderful rheumatism remedy sold by A. A. Clarke and all druggists, gives quicker and more lasting relief than other remedies costing many times as much. Rheuma gets at once into the blood and purifies it, allowing it to feed freely into the veins and arteries and passes the deadly poisonous secretions into the bowels and kidneys, from which they are quickly thrown off in a natural, healthy way.

Read what a reputable physician says about Rheuma: "I have made a most careful investigation of the formula employed in the manufacture of Rheuma, and I heartily recommend it as a remedy for all forms of rheumatism, gout, and complications arising from neglect of these diseases in their early stages. On the basis of the formula used alone, I find Rheuma far in advance of the methods generally employed in the treatment of rheumatism, and altogether different in composition from the remedies usually prescribed."

This should give any sufferer from rheumatism confidence in trying Rheuma. It is so inexpensive you cannot afford to do without it.—Adv.

THE SOISSON.

"FIRE AND SWORD."

"Fire and Sword" a gigantic six reel production is the attraction at the Soisson Theatre tomorrow. It is a wonderful play full of thrilling scenes and incidents. "The Jackpot Club" is a two reel feature that will please everybody. "The Foreman's Treachery" is a western play full of striking scenes. The Joker comedy "Father's Girl" is a very excellent play. The "Trey O' Hearts" comes today and Monday a very beautiful drama of the Franco-Prussian war "Faithful Unto Death" will be presented. It is an interesting play.

THE GIRLS FROM THE FOLLIES.

As something entirely new with high class burlesque critics in other cities say the "Girls From the Follies" company, which plays an engagement at the Soisson Theatre Tuesday, September 22, is deserving of the closest attention. Its ravishing beauty chorus 35 in number, is said to eclipse any ever carried by an organization presenting its style of entertainment. Fashionable Vaudeville is presented between the first and second act of the musical farce "The Lady Pirates" in which the irrepressible Harry Stoppo the Hebrew gent, is seen at his best. He is ably assisted by Charles Quinn who portrays the character of Ted Casey, a skipper of the old school. Vesta Lockard as Captain Kitty, Gertrude Weston as Miss Corday a celebrated actress. Charles and Jessie Quinn billed as "The Two Nuts From Brazil" offer a line of nonsensical patter so much now in vogue. They are followed by Annie Goldie, the queen of Ethiopian singers who offers some bits of the period. Then comes the most sensational bicycle act of the season. Harry Fisher and his eight cycling models, direct from a five-year triumphal tour of the European music halls where they were a most sensational success seldom accorded any American act.

Special to The Courier.

MOUNT PLEASANT, September 18. Company B, Twenty-eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, held its third annual reunion at the Cooper Hotel yesterday. The centerpieces were red, white and blue made from fall flowers. At the business meeting the following officers were elected: Chairman, J. B. Zuck; secretary, Nicholas Long; Treasurer, Jonathan Barron. As this company has organized to have its annual reunion as long as three members live, it is the duty of the officers to keep account of the death of each man who dies. Last year two died, Levi Ebert of Latrobe and Josiah M. Riser of Los Angeles.

Those present were: J. B. Zuck, Frank Miller, David Moninger and Jonathan Barron, of this place; William Wright of Southwest; Albert Berlin of Greensburg; Abraham R. Hammer, Hafford; John H. A people dog belonging to Mr. Hanks was struck by an automobile on Main street yesterday and killed.

Prof. C. L. Gandy began yesterday with his fire drills at the Church street building. After a careful explanation of the meaning of fire drills and a test drill was given just as the subject had time to leave the child's mind. The drill yesterday was not a drill for speed but a drill to see how orderly they could be disposed of and how easily they could get out of the 100-yard distance from the school house. The order in dismissal yesterday as the going sounded was very good, only a few laggards. The thoughts of fire and broke the even lines. In one minute and a half the building was empty and the children on the north side of the building were put in the factory and those that met the fire engine were 100 feet back of the building.

Albert Newell, aged 55 years, died at his country home near here yesterday. Funeral services will be held on Friday morning and interment will be made in the Middle Presbyterian cemetery.

Mrs. John Bowman entertained at her home in the Bank apartments on South Church street yesterday afternoon with three tables of bridge in honor of Miss A. K. Miller. Very delicious refreshments were served. The out of town guests were Mrs. Hutter, wife of Scottdale and Mrs. M. Nish of Altoona.

Joseph and Anna Washko were compelled to pay Mary Plakati $10 and costs amounting to $20 after a hearing before Justice of the Peace L. S. Rhodes charged with assault and battery. The case had gathered at a neighbor's home where the woman was thrown against a stove and her arm burned. Mary was willing to take the $10 rather than have the matter go to court.

Valen Walkowiak and son John were given a hearing charged with assault and battery by Peter Vanshok before Justice of the Peace L. S. Rhodes. The case began on the coke yard and was settled by the defendant paying $20 costs.

The Last Shot

By FREDERICK PALMER

(Copyright, 1914, by Charles Scribner's Sons)

Westerling, who had buried his face in his hands in Martia's presence at the thought of failure, must keep the pose of his position before the staff. With chin drawn in and shoulders squared in a sort of petrified military habit, he received the feverish news that grew worse with each brief bulletin. He, the chief of staff, he, the worthy Westerling, the superman, must be a rock in the flood of alarm. When he heard that his human arm was in recoil he declared that the recoil had been exaggerated—repulses always were. With word that a heavy counter attack was turning the retreat into an unmanageable rout, he broke into a storm. He was not beaten; he could not be beaten.

"Let our guns cut a few swaths in the mob!" he cried. "That will stop them from running and bring them back to a sense of duty to their country."

The irritating titter of the bell in the closet off the library only increased his defiance of facts beyond control. He went to the long distance with a reply to the premier's inquiry ready to his lips.

"We got into the enemy's works but had to fall back temporarily," he said. "Temporarily! What do you mean?" demanded the premier.

"I mean that we have only begun to attack!" declared Westerling. He liked that sentence. It sounded like the shibboleth of a great leader in a crisis. "I shall assault again to-morrow night!"

"Then your losses were not heavy?" "No, not relatively. To-morrow night we press home the advantage we gained to-night."

"But you have been so confident each time. You still think that—" "That I mean to win! There is no stopping halfway."

"Well, I'll still try to hold the situation here," replied the premier. "But keep me informed."

Drugged by his desperate stubbornness, Westerling was believing in his star again when he returned to the library. All the greater his success for being won against skepticism and fear. He summoned his chiefs of divisions, who came with the news that the Browns had taken the very redoubt from which the head of the Gray charge had started, but there they had stopped.

"Of course! Of course they stopped!" exclaimed Westerling. "They are not mad. A few are not going to throw themselves against superior numbers."

"A Whole Brigade Mine! I Live!"

—our superior numbers beaten by our own panic! Lanstron is not a fool. You'll find the Browns back in their old position, working like beavers to mine new defenses in the morning. Meanwhile, we'll get that mob of ours into shape and find out what made them lose their nerve. To-morrow night we shall have as many more behind them. We are going to attack again!"

The staff exchanged glances of amazement and Turcas, his dry, cold, tracking his parchment, exclaimed: "Attack again? At the same point?"

"Yes—the one place to attack!" said Westerling. "The rest of our line has abundant reserves, a useless number for anything but the offensive. We'll leave enough to hold and draw off the rest to Fagnard at once."

"But their driftings! A surprising number of them are over our lines." "Believe the chief of intelligence, had the temerity to say."

"You will send our planes and dirigibles to bring down theirs!" Westerling commanded. "I have—every last one; but they outnumber us!" persisted Bellini.

"Even in retreat they can see. The air has cleared so that considerable bodies of troops in motion will be readily discernible from high altitudes. The reason for our failure last night was that they knew our plan of attack."

"They knew! They knew, after all our precautions! There is still a leak! You—"

Westerling raised his clenched hand threateningly at the chief of intelligence, his cheeks purple with rage, his eyes bloodshot. But Bellini, with his boyish, small face and round head set close to his shoulders, remained undisturbedly exact.

"Yes, there is a leak, and from the staff," he answered. "Until I have found it this army ought to suspend any aggressive—"

"I was not asking advice!" interrupted Westerling.

"But, I repeat, the leak is not necessary to disclose this new movement that you plan. Their aircraft will disclose it," Bellini concluded. He had done his duty and had nothing more to say.

"Dirigibles do not win battles!" Westerling announced. "They are won by getting infantry in possession of positions and holding them. No matter of we don't surprise the enemy, Haven't the Browns held their line with inferior numbers? If they have, we can hold the rest of ours. That gives us overwhelming forces at Fagnard."

"You take all responsibility?" asked Turcas.

"I do!" said Westerling firmly. "And we will waste no more time. The premier supports me. I have decided. We will set the troops in motion."

With fierce energy he set to work, detaching units of artillery and infantry from every part of the line and starting them toward Fagnard.

"This means an improvised organization; it breaks up the machine," said the tactical expert to Turcas when they were alone.

"Yes," replied Turcas. "He wanted no advice from us when he was taking counsel of desperation. If he succeeds, success will retrieve all the rest of his errors. We may have a stroke of luck in our favor."

In the headquarters of the Browns, junior officers and clerks reported the words of each bulletin with the relief of men who breathed freely again. The chiefs of divisions who were with Lanstron alternately sat down and paced the floor, their restlessness now that of a happiness too deeply thrilling to be expressed by hilarity. Each fresh detail only confirmed the completeness of the repulse as that memorable night in the affairs of the two nations slowly wore on. Shortly before three, when the firing had died after the Brown pursuit had stopped, a wireless from a dirigible flying over the frontier came, telling of bodies of Gray troops and guns on the march. Soon planes and other dirigibles flying over other positions were sending in word of the same tenor. The chiefs drew around the table and looked into one another's eyes in the significance of a common thought.

"It cannot be a retreat!" said the vice chief.

"Hardly. That is inconceivable of Westerling at this time," Lanstron replied. "The bull charges when wounded. It is clear that he means to make another attack. These troops on the march across country are isolated from any immediate service."

It was Lanstron's way to be suggestive; to let ideas develop in council and orders follow an out of council. "The chance!" exclaimed some one.

"The chance!" others said in the same breath. "The God-given chance for a quick blow!" The chance? We attack! "We attack!"

It was the most natural conception to a military tactician, though any man who made it his own might have built a reputation on it if he knew how to get the ear of the press. Their faces were close to Lanstron as they leaned toward him eagerly. He seemed not to see them but to be looking at Parlow's chair. In imagination Parlow was there in life—Parlow with the dome forehead, the pendulous cheeks, the shrewd, kindly eyes. A daring risk, this! What would Parlow say? Lanstron always asked himself this in a crisis. What would Parlow say?

"Well, my boy, why are you hesitating?" Parlow demanded. "I don't know that I'd have taken my long holiday and left you in charge if I'd thought you'd be losing your nerve as you are this minute. Wren't it part of my plan—my dream—that plan I gave you to read in the vials, to strike it a chance, this very chance, were to come? Hurry up! Seconds count!"

"Yes, a chance to end the killing for good and all," said Lanstron, coming abruptly out of his silence. "We'll take it and strike hard."

The staff beat over the map. Lanstron's finger flying from point to point, while ready expert answers to his questions were at his elbow and the wires sang out directions that made a drenched and shivering soldier who had been yielding and holding and never advancing grow warm with the thought of springing from the mine of trenches to charge the enemy.

And one, Gustavo Feller, in command of a brigade of field-guns, the noble guns that could go forward rumbling in the horses' trot—saw his dearly beloved batteries swing into a road in the moonlight.

"La, la, la! The worm will turn!" he chuckled. "It's a merry, gambling old world and I'm right foud of it—so full of the unexpected for the Gray!" That lead horse is a little lame, but he'll last the night through. Lots of lame things will! Who knows? Maybe we'll be cleaning the mud off our boots on the white posts of the frontier to-morrow! A whole brigade mine! I live! You old brick, Lanstron! This time we are going to spank the enemy on the part of his anatomy where spansks are conventionally given. La, la, la!"

CHAPTER XX.

Turning the Tables. Through the door which the aide had left open the division chiefs, led by Turcas, filed in. To Westerling they seemed like a procession of ghosts. The features of one were the features of all, graven with the weariness of the machine's treadmill. Their harness held them up. A moving platform under their feet kept their legs moving. They grouped around the great man's desk silently. Turcas, his eyes a half-opened seam, his voice that of a sniffling parchment, acting as spokesman.

"The enemy seized his advantage," he said, "when he found that our reserves were on the march, out of touch with the wire to headquarters."

Westerling forced a smile which he wanted to be a knowing smile.

"However, we had not prepared our positions for the defensive," continued that very literal parchment voice.

"They began an assault on our left flank first and we've just had word that they have turned it. Nor is that the worst of it. They are pressing at other well-chosen points. They threaten to pierce our center."

"Our center!" gibed Westerling. "You need rest. Our center, where we have the column of last night's attack still concentrated! If anything would convince me that I have to fight this war alone—I—" Westerling choked in irritation.

"Yes. The ground is such that it is a tactically safe and advantageous move for Lanstron to make. He strikes at the vitals of our machine."

"But what about the remainder of the force that made the charge? What about all our guns concentrated in front of Fagnard?"

"I was coming to that. The rout of the assaulting column was much worse than we had supposed. Those who are strong enough cannot be got to reform. Many were so exhausted that they dropped in their tracks. Our guns are at this moment in retreat—or being captured by the rush of the Browns' infantry. Your Excellency, the crisis is sudden, incredible."

"Our wire service has broken down. We cannot communicate with many of our division commanders," put in Bellini, the chief of intelligence.

"Yes, our organization, so dependent on communication, is in danger of disruption," concluded Turcas. "To avoid disorder, we think it best to retreat across the plain to our own range."

At the word "retreat" Westerling sprang to his feet, his cheeks purple, the veins of his neck and temples sculptured as he took a threatening step toward the group, which fell back before the physical rage of the man, all except the vice chief, his mouth a thin, ashy line, who held his own.

"You coward!" Westerling thundered. "Retreat when we have five millions to their three!"

"We have not that odds now," replied the parchment voice. "All their men are engaged. They have caught us at a disadvantage, unable to use our numbers except in detail in trying to hold on in face of—"

"I tell you we cannot retreat!" Westerling interrupted. "That is the end. I know what you do not know. I am in touch with the government. Yes, I know—"

This brought fresh alarm into faces which had become set in grim stolidity by many alarms. If the people were in ignorance of the losses and the army in ignorance of the nation's feeling, the officers of the staff were no less in ignorance of what passed over the long-distance wire between the chief of staff and the premier.

"I know what is best—I alone!" Westerling continued, driving home his point. "Tell our commanders to hold. Neither general nor man is to budge. They are to stick to the death. Any one who does not I shall hold up to public shame as a poltroon. Who knows but Lanstron's attack may be a council of desperation? The Browns may be worse off than we are. Hold, hold! If we are tired, they are tired. Frequently it takes only an ounce more of resolution to turn the tide of battle. Hold, hold! To-morrow will tell a different story! We are going to win yet! Yes, we are going to win!"

"It is for you to decide, Your Excellency," said Turcas, slowly and precisely. "You take the responsibility."

"I take the responsibility. I am in command!" replied Westerling in unflinching pose.

"Yes, Your Excellency."

And they filed out of the room, leaving him to his isolation.

After Martia had learned, over the telephone, from Lanstron of the certain repulse of the Gray assault, fatigue—sheer physical fatigue such as made soldiers drop dead in slumber on the earth, their packs still on their backs—overcame her. Her work was done. The demands of nature overwhelmed her faculties. She slept with a nervous twitching of her muscles, a restless tossing of her little body, until hammers began beating on her temples, beating, beating with the sound of shell bursts, as if to warn her that punishment for her share in the killing was to be the eternal concussion of battle in her ears. At length she realized that the cannonading was real.

Hastening out-of-doors, as her glance swept toward the range she saw bursts of shrapnel smoke from the guns of the Browns nearer than since the fighting had begun on the main line, and these were directed at bodies of infantry that were in confused retreat down the slopes, while all traffic on the pass road was moving toward the rear impelled by a new apprehension she hurried to the tunnel. Lanstron answered her promptly in a voice that had a ring of relief and joy in place of the tension that had characterized it since the outbreak of the war.

"Thanks to you, Martia!" he cried. "Everything goes back to you—thanks to you came this chance to attack, and we are succeeding at every point! You are the general, you the maker of victories!"

"Yes, the general of still more killing!" she cried in indignation. "Why have you gone on with the slaughter? I did not help you for this. Why?"

No reply came. She poured out more questions, and still no reply. She pressed the button and tried again, but she might as well have been talking over a dead wire.

One man alone against the tide—rather, the man who has seen a tide rise at his orders now finding all its sweep against him—Westerling, accustomed to have millions of men move at his command, found himself, one man out of the millions, still and helpless while they moved of their own impulses.

As news of positions lost came in, he could only grimly repeat, "Hold! Tell them to hold!" fruitlessly, like adjurations to the wind to cease blowing. The bell of the long distance kept ringing unheeded, until at last his aide came to say that the premier must speak either to him or to the vice chief.

Westerling staggered to his feet and with jerking steps went into the closet. There he sank down on the chair in a heap, staring at the telephone mouthpiece. Again the bell rang. Clenching his hands in a rocking effort, he was able to stiffen his spine once more as he took down the receiver. To admit defeat to the premier—no, he was not ready for that, yet.

"The truth is out!" said the premier without any break in his voice and with the fatalism of one who never allows himself to blink a fact. "Telegraphers at the front who got out of touch with the staff were still in touch with the capital. Once the reports began to come, they poured in—destination of the attacking column, panic and retreat in other portions of the line—chaos!"

"It's a lie!" Westerling declared vehemently.

"The news has reached the press," the premier proceeded. "Editions are already in the streets."

"What! Where is your censorship?" gasped Westerling.

"It is helpless, a straw protesting against a current," the premier replied. "A censorship goes back to physical forces, as every law does in the end—to the police and the army; and all, these days, finally to public opinion. After weeks of secrecy, of reported successes, when nobody really knew what was happening, this sudden disillusioning announcement of the truth has sent the public mad."

"It is your business to control the public!" complained Westerling.

"With what now? With a speech on a lullaby? As well could you stop the retreat with your naked hands. My business to control the public, yes, but not in such cases. I gave you the soldiers. We have nothing but police here, and I tell you that the public is in a mob rage—the whole public, bankers and business and professional men included. I have just ordered the stock exchange and all banks closed."

"There's a cure for mobs!" cried Westerling. "Let the police fire a few volleys and they'll behave."

"Would that stop the retreat of the army? We must sue for peace."

"Sue for peace! Sue for peace when we have five millions against their three!"

"It seems so, as the three millions are winning," said the premier.

"Sue for peace because women go hysterical? Do you suppose that the Browns will listen now when they think they have the advantage? Leave peace to me! Give me forty-eight hours more! I have told our troops to hold and they will hold. I don't mistake cowardly telegraphers' rumors for facts."

"Pardon me a moment," the premier interrupted. "I must answer a local call." So astute a man of affairs as he knew that Westerling's voice, storming, breaking, lightening with effort at control, confirmed all reports of disaster. "In fact, the crockery is broken—for you and for me!" said the premier when he spoke again. His life had been a gamble and the gamble had turned against him in playing for a great prize. There was an admirable stolidity in the way he announced the news he had received from the local call: "The chief of police calls me up to say that the uprising is too vast for him to hold. There isn't any mutiny, but his men simply have become a part of public opinion. A mob of women and children is starting for the palace to ask me what I have done with their husbands, brothers, sons, and fathers. They won't have to break in to find me. I'm very tired. I'm ready. I shall face them from the balcony. Yes, Westerling, you and I have achieved a place in history, and they're far more bitter toward you than me. However, you don't have to come back."

"No, I don't have to go back! No, I won't go back if I failed!" said Westerling dizzily.

In the lower room, whose opening door gave glimpses of Lanstron and the division chiefs, a magic of secret council which the juniors could not quite understand had wrought the wonder. Lanstron had not forgotten the dead. He could see them; he could see everything that happened. Had not Parlow said to him: "Don't just read reports. Visualize men and events. Be the artillery, be the infantry, be the wounded—live and think in their places. In this way only can you really know your work!"

His elation when he saw his plans going right was that of the instrument of Parlow's training and Martia's service.

For a Weak Stomach.

There are people right in this vicinity who find it necessary to be very careful about what they eat as they have weak stomachs. Many of them would be very much benefited by the same treatment that cured Mrs. Ernest Pharo, of Beaver Dam, Ohio, who writes: "I had a weak stomach and for years certain food disagreed with me. I would feel uncomfortable for hours after eating. I lost weight and became debilitated. Then I began taking Chamberlain's Tablets and the promptness with which they benefited me surprised both myself and my family. They strengthened my digestion and in a short time I was sound and well. I can safely say all doctors—Ade."
